Kate Cumberland Violates the Law

Kate Cumberland, a divorced woman, was n the Police Court this morning as an airisiting E. Fribley and family on Wallach leged vagrant. Yesterday afternoon, while ender the influence of liquor, she caused a disturbance in the Webster building, adjoining the Police Court. Only a few days ago she was released from the workhouse, where she had served time for a similar offense. In court today she told the judge that she had been stopping in the law building, where she was arrested. She said she had been furnished a place to sleep by an

had been furnished a place to sleep by an ex-captain in the army, to whom she is soon to be married. Attorneys in the building declared to the judge that both the woman and the old pensioner have been drinking for several days and asked that the court separate them.

"Tomorrow is pension day," said one of the attorneys, "and I would like to have your honor take some action that will protect the old man and his money for a short time,"

Judge Kimball was told that the woman used bad language, and she also did a skirt dance on the street in front of a hand organ. Kate admitted her former transgressions, but declared she was sober yesterday. Other people about the building, she said, were, not sober. The unfortunate woman said she still mourned the death of her husband, although she was divorced from him, and she had concluded to get married again in order to get a guardian
